Seventh Sunday After Easter (Nicean Holy Fathers)

This Sunday reminds us of the first universal Council assembled at Nicea in 325. The Council was convened by the first Christian Emperor Constantine the Great with the sanction of Pope Sylvester I. 318 Bishops, mostly Eastern, under the presidency of Hosius and two Roman priests, legates of the Holy See, took part in the council.

The Council condemned the heresy of Arius, a priest from Alexandria. Arius denied that Christ was really and truly God. The Council proclaimed That Jesus is true God, consubstantial with the Father. It defined the true Catholic teaching in a formula which later was expanded into the "Nicene Creed."

The day on which Easter should be celebrated was also fixed. The Latin Church does not have a special feast in honor of the Fathers of the Nicaen Council.

The Holy Fathers of the Church are the eminent preachers, writers and defenders of the Faith distinguished by the following three characteristics: personal sanctity, solidity (Orthodoxy) of their teaching in all their writings, sermons, and antiquity (up to the eighth century).

The most prominent Fathers of the Eastern Church are: St. Irenaeus, St. Athanasius, St. Cyril of Alexandria, St. Basil the Great, St. Gregory the Theologian, St. John Chrysostom and St. Ephrem.

The Church commemorates the remembrance of these valiant defenders of the faith to remind her faithful of their duty to defend the treasure of their faith against any possible attack and to live according to its maxims and principles.
